Asharton Manor stands alone in the middle of a pine forest, once the place where ancient pagan ceremonies were undertaken in honour of the goddess Astarte. The Manor is one of the most beautiful stately homes in the West Country and seems like a palace to Joan Hart, newly arrived from London to take up a servant's position as the head kitchen maid.

Death at the Manor - Celina Grace | The Reader In the Tower

A time leap at Asharton Manor as this second story is set post WW11 with an authentic feel for the period and a murder mystery to be solved. There's also a hidden link to the first book in the series, Death at the Manor .A good short story that keeps the reader guessing and well worth the price. I'm looking forward to number three in the series.

The Asharton Manor novellas are so well written that I could not put the books down until the end. Following the Manor through the eras is a delightful journey, the attention to detail is excellent. The mystery and how it is solved keeps one guessing until the very end. I have all the books in the series and highly recommend them.
