Buddhism with an Attitude: The Tibetan Seven-Point Mind Training. All of us have attitudes. Some of them accord with reality and serve us well throughout the course of our lives. Others are out of alignment with reality and cause us problems. Tibetan Buddhist practice isn't just sitting in silent meditation.

Buddhism with an Attitude - B. Alan Wallace
Here is an excerpt from Buddhism with an Attitude. In the early 1970's, a friend of mine complained to the Dalai Lama about how difficult it is to become enlightened in such a degenerate time as ours. This has been a familiar refrain throughout the history of Buddhism, with just about every generation referring to its own era as a degenerate time.

Even for one who does not practice Buddhism, Buddhism with an Attitude is an erudite essay on spirituality, psychology, and quantum physics, and challenges one to think about personal growth. Wallace not only quotes great Buddhist teachers such as Padmasmbhava and Gyatrul Rinpoche, but moves dexterously from William James, to John Muir, Henry David Thoreau, and Niels Bohr.

I talked about how "Buddhist people" should be, but now (2012) the people in Tibet are performing acts of selfimmolation. It is very emotional and not the right way and attitude. To burn oneself is not Buddhist. If this act would really benefit many people, then burning oneself without emotion could be acceptable.
